Improvisation (2010)

This is the first performance by this quartet. There is no score.

Interactive Trio (rev. 2009)

George Lewis and Ellen Weller are performing live with a computer music program/composition that analyzes an improvisor’s performance in real time, generating both complex responses to the performance and independent behavior arising from the program’s own internal processes.

Ikons (2010), US premiere

Ikons exists in two parts. In the large-scale collaborative installation, by George Lewis and Canadian artist Eric Metcalfe, sounds embedded within seven large pyramidal “ikons” appear to respond to visitor movement, creating an interactive virtual orchestra from the agency and indeterminacy embedded at various levels in the human/computer encounter. The sonic material for the virtual orchestra, designed as similarly “ikonic,” was abstracted from the composition being performed this evening. Both parts were first presented in January 2010 as part of the Vancouver Cultural Olympiad.

Artificial Life 2007 (2007)

Artificial Life 2007, commissioned and premiered by the Glasgow Improvisers Orchestra, is designed to realize a model of group improvisation as an emergent phenomenon based on negotiation and local intelligence. The work is composed of two parts, either or both of which may be performed as desired, consisting of a set of instructions, represented graphically on a grid. The moment of execution and the kind of sounds and silences produced are chosen according to the improvisors’ considered judgment unless an instruction indicates otherwise.
Although structural components and sonic gestures do recur by design throughout the work, in performance the use of intuition and snap judgments are preferable to teleological thinking, and attempts to articulate or impose global form should be rooted out and eliminated by the performers. As with all improvisations, including our everyday-life human efforts, all aspects of the performance are achieved through negotiation and consensus, and the success of the performance is less a question of individual freedom than of the assumption of personal responsibility for the sonic environment.

George E. Lewis is the Edwin H. Case Professor of American Music at Columbia University. The recipient of a MacArthur Fellowship in 2002, an Alpert Award in the Arts in 1999, and fellowships from the National Endowment for the Arts, Lewis studied composition with Muhal Richard Abrams at the AACM School of Music, and trombone with Dean Hey. A member of the Association for the Advancement of Creative Musicians (AACM) since 1971, Lewis’s work as a composer, improvisor, performer and interpreter explores electronic and computer music, computer-based multimedia installations, text-sound works, and notated and improvisative forms, and is documented on more than 130 recordings. His oral history is archived in Yale University’s collection of “Major Figures in American Music,” and his published articles on music, experimental video, visual art, and cultural studies have appeared in numerous scholarly journals and edited volumes. His widely acclaimed book, A Power Stronger Than Itself: The AACM and American Experimental Music (University of Chicago Press, 2008) is a recipient of the American Book Award (2009), the American Musicological Society’s Music in American Culture Award (2009), an Award for Excellence in Recorded Sound Research from the Association for Recorded Sound Collections (2009), and an award from the Jazz Journalists Association for the Best Book on Jazz (2009). From 1991-2004, Lewis taught at UCSD, and co-founded the Critical Studies/Experimental Practices Program. His reflections on some aspects of his UCSD experience has been published as “Teaching Improvised Music: An Ethnographic Memoir,” in Arcana: Musicians on Music, edited by John Zorn (Granary Books, 2000).
