CINQUIEME CONCERT
JEAN-PHILIPPE RAMEAU

The great French Baroque composer Jean-Philippe Rameau (1683-1764), best-known for his solo harpsichord music as well as his operas, composed only one work of chamber music, the Pieces de Clavecin en Concerts. The “Pieces” consist of six separate Concerts, or works. The 5th work, Cinquieme Concert, was originally scored for harpsichord, violin, and viola da gamba and was arranged for flute, viola and harp by the Myriad Trio.

Rameau published the Pieces de Clavecin in 1741 by which time he had already begun composing the operas that would make him famous. Inspired by the sonatas for violin and harpsichord by a now-forgotten composer, Jean-Joseph Casanea de Mondonville, Rameau considered the collection quite satisfactory for harpsichord alone, with other instrument voices possible to add. Several musical acquaintances, whom helped to name the movements, also agreed. However, breaking away from the previous tradition of French chamber works, Rameau does give equal roles to the three instruments and encourages a unified ensemble by having the accompanying instruments play from the score for more awareness of the parts and to achieve proper balance and blend. Concert No. 5 works beautifully for this ensemble with each of the three instruments having solo moments as well as moments of intricate group playing.

TAIWANESE FOLK SUITE
CHIA-YU HSU

Commissioned by The Myriad Trio, the Taiwanese Folk Suite was composed in 2010 by Taiwanese composer Chia-Yu Hsu. Hsu was born in Banciao, Taiwan and has been the winner of numerous grants and competitions including the 2010 Sorel Organization recording grant, Music+Culture 2009 International Competition for Composers, the Sorel Organization’s 2nd International Composition Competition, and the 7th USA International Harp Composition Competition, among others. Her works have been performed by the Detroit Symphony, San Francisco Symphony, and Toledo Symphony, as well as the American Composers Orchestra, Cabrillo Festival Orchestra, Aspen Music Festival Contemporary Ensemble, Eighth Blackbird, and the Prism Quartet. Moving to the United States to receive her degrees, Hsu earned her Ph.D. from Duke University, Master of Music degree and Artist Diploma from Yale University School of Music, and her Bachelor of Music degree from the Curtis Institute of Music.

Two of the most well known Taiwanese folk songs are used in this collection: “thi (N) oo oo” (Darkening Sky) and “Bang tshun-hong” (Spring Breeze). The first song, a children’s folk tune, depicts an amusing quarrel between an old farming couple. With the darkening sky and heavy rain approaching, the husband is out in the field digging up taro when he catches a loach (mud fish) in the mud. The husband heads home and wants to prepare it for dinner with a lot of salt, but his wife wants it to be light. They end up unable to cook the loach because they break the pot in the midst of their fight! The second song describes a shy, young girl's longing to find the man of her dreams and to unite with her unknown love. She sees the man walk past her home and when she hears a door close she thinks that he has come to seek her and she runs to the window. The girl’s nanny sees this but laughs at her saying it was only the spring breeze...

Hsu successfully communicates these stories through the imagery in the music. In the beginning of the work, one can imagine the thunder approaching in the harp entrance and the swinging section before the tender closing represents the shy, youthfulness of the young lady.

William Mathias (1934-1992) began composing early in his twenties and, throughout his career, developed his reputation as one of the best-known Welsh composers of his time. Born in Whitland, Wales, Mathias wrote for a variety of genres including choral, orchestral, opera, chamber music and instrumental studies, specifically specializing in organ, piano & harp scores.

Zodiac Trio, written for the Robles Trio, was premiered in 1976. As described in the opening page of the score, the title was derived “entirely from the fact that it was composed for and dedicated to three personal friends each of whom was born under a different sign of the Zodiac.” With distinctive imagery, the three movements of the piece - Pisces, Aries & Taurus - truly come alive. Pisces, a water sign, represents the fish and is played by the flute. Its animated, playful quality is balanced with the water-like fluidity of the harp. Aries, the first sign in the Zodiac, represents the Ram. Portrayed by the viola, the regal character of the Ram is interspersed with the emotional outbursts of the flute and steadied by the calm rhythm of the harp. Taurus, the sign of the Bull and portrayed by the harp, has an earthy quality and maintains a grounded and gripping energy in the last movement. The vigorous flute & viola configurations combined with the weighted patterns in the harp together create a blend of sharp, contrasting colors. For tonight’s performance, the three signs represented on stage are Virgo (Demarre), Sagittarius (Brian), and Libra (Julie).

Duo for Flute & Viola
François Devienne

François Devienne (1759-1803) was a trained bassoonist and flutist as well as a composer, teacher and scholar. A French contemporary of Mozart, he moved to Paris at the age of 20 and performed with various ensembles including the Paris Opera. His contribution to the flute world included the method book, ‘Méthode de Flûte Théorique et Pratique’, which he wrote in 1793 and did much to improve the level of French wind music in the 18th century. In 1795 when the Paris Conservatory was chartered, Devienne became an administrator and one of its first flute professors. Devienne’s scope of compositions include 12 operas and approximately 300 works for mostly wind instruments including concerti, sinfonias, quartets, trios, and sonatas. This output was brought to more public attention thanks to Jean-Pierre Rampal’s performances of Devienne’s works in the 60’s.

The Duo Concertante for Flute and Viola, Op. 5, No. 3 is one of six duets that Devienne wrote for the combination. Having only two movements in each duet, the flute and viola balance each other and are given equal importance in the piece. Though this equality was not common in France at the time, the brilliance and melodic style typical of Devienne, combined with his touch of Parisian grace, creates a beautiful balance and makes for an elegant gem to recover.

Aria
Jacques Ibert

This simple yet profound work by Jacques Ibert (1890-1962) was written in 1930 when he was already in his 40’s. Originally composed for flute, violin and piano, it works beautifully for various combinations of instruments. Ibert was a student of Gabriel Faure and studied under him at the Paris Conservatory from 1911-1919. At the end of his studies, Ibert won the Prix de Rome and wrote many of his first important compositions during his time in Rome. Ibert held several important positions during his career including the Director of the Academie de France in Rome, Assistant Director of the Paris Opera, and later he was the Director of the combined managements of the Paris Opera and the Opera-Comique. Having written for nearly all genres of classical music and unattached to any one musical school or fashion, Ibert’s style is described as being eclectic and, as he accounts, “all systems are valid.” Very fond of the flute and intimate chamber music, this beautiful Aria showcases Ibert’s sentimental and lyrical nature.
Milton Barnes (1931-2001), a native of Toronto, Ontario was an active musician, composer, conductor and jazz drummer. He received his training in conducting and composition at the Royal Conservatory of Music in Toronto and spent the 60’s & 70’s conducting in North America and leading numerous ensembles in the greater Toronto area. In 1973 he left conducting in order to focus on composing and from then on he only conducted performances of his own works. Most noted for his diversity, Barnes’ style is described as an “eclectic fusion.” He was greatly influenced by the cross-cultural environment of contemporary Canada and his music blends together elements of classical, jazz, and pop styles.

Harbord Street Trio is a fun and illustrative collection of scenes from the famous Harbord Street in Toronto. Commissioned by Rafi Kosower, owner of the Harbord Bakery, it was written for the Toronto-based ensemble, Trio Lyra, in 1991.
