PASSAGE 9:

On Collaborative Alliances, John Cage, John Ashbery, Barnett Newman and the Sublime, Toru Takemitsu, the Source of Aesthetic Impact, Intermedia, and Obligation

PASSAGE 9 is a performed event: a non-linear aggregation of original stories, visual images, video clips, live performances, and sound spatialization. The composer, as reader, is joined by computer musician Paul Hembree, percussionist Steven Schick, and flutist Rachel Beetz. Also included is a section from the recently completed multimedia documentation by Ross Karre of the collaborative work done by contrabassist Mark Dresser with composer Reynolds and computer musician Paul Hembree: MARKed MUSIC.

Several years ago, I began a series of presentations offering what I hope is an intriguing way of sharing observations, images, sounds, and their unpredictable resonances. PASSAGE 9 is not a lecture ‘about something.’ There isn’t a particular message that everyone is supposed to receive. I’m rather hoping that each individual will make her or his own connections between the elements. My intent is associative and inferential, not illustrative or explanatory. My texts, some read live and some pre-recorded, are spatialized in real time by a computer algorithm so as to allow one to experience a metaphoric choreography of ideas, where lines of thought intersect and challenge one another in unexpected ways.

The texts are on a wide variety of subjects. Most of them have a story-line and also a “take away.” I had no (conscious) models in mind in devising the PASSAGE concept, but I certainly remember with pleasure the one-minute stories that John Cage used to read in performances of his Indeterminacy.

I realized a few years ago that I was not so comfortable any longer with giving “a lecture about some thing.” It felt more interesting to make a presentation of what was on my mind in a more non-linear way, a way that invites each person in the audience to make her or his own response. It is true that, because I am a musician, my life privileges music. But, hopefully, this is not so narrow a subject as one might think.

The PASSAGE experience aims to be suggestive to the imagination. All artists, all human beings, have an imaginative inner life. Through most of human history, those inner imaginings were not directly shareable. They were confined within us. Now, with the aid of digital media, the province of the individual imagination can be move toward that of shared experience. If I want my voice to seem to meander choreographically around the hall, it can be done.

The Oxford English Dictionary's definition of “passage” informed my thinking while working on this piece:

The action of going or moving onward, across, or past; movement from one place or point to another ... Migratory flight of a bird ... Transition from one state or condition to another ... a road, a path, a route, a channel ... A thing that passes or takes place; an occurrence; an event; a proceeding ... an exchange of words, actions, etc. ...

Roger Reynolds
ROGER REYNOLDS

Roger Reynolds’ compositions incorporate elements of theater, digital signal processing, dance, video, and real-time computer processing, in signature multidimensionality. The central thread through his career entwines language with musical space, and first emerged in his notorious music theater work, The Emperor of Ice Cream (1961-62). These concerns persisted in such works as the VOICESPACE series of quadraphonic tape compositions, Odyssey (commissioned by IRCAM and premiered by the Ensemble Intercontemporain, David Robertson, conductor), and JUSTICE (based upon a text from Aeschylus, and commissioned by the Library of Congress). Reynolds often works at the interface between high technology and art in such pieces as ILLUSION, commissioned by the Los Angeles Philharmonic in cooperation with the Rockefeller and Koussevitzky foundations; 22, a collaboration with dancer Bill T. Jones, and the Arts Media and Engineering program at ASU, and Submerged Memories for Paul Dresher’s Electroacoustic Band with tenor John Dykers.

In addition to his composing, Reynolds’ writing, lecturing, organization of musical events, and teaching have prompted numerous residencies at international festivals: Darmstadt, Music Today, the Helsinki Biennale, the Agora, Proms, and Edinburgh festivals among them. Reynolds’ published scores – he is exclusively represented by C.F. Peters Corporation – number nearly 100, and are supplemented by dozens of CD recordings, from Mode Records, the New World, Lovely, Wergo, Pogus, and Neuma labels. Reynolds has held visiting appointments at Yale, Harvard, the University of Illinois, the Sibelius Academy, Brooklyn College of CCNY, and Amherst College. He is University Professor, based at UCSD, and has recently inaugurated an Arts activism program at the University of California’s Washington Center. Commissioners have included the Library of Congress (which established a Special Collection of his work in 1998), the Philadelphia, the National Symphony, and the Los Angeles Philharmonic orchestras, the British Arts Council, the BBC Proms Festival, Suntory Hall, Radio France, the Guggenheim Museum, the NEA, the French Ministry of Culture, and the Fromm Foundation. Whispers Out of Time for string orchestra earned him the Pulitzer Prize in 1988. Reynolds’s writing – including the books Mind Models (1975, revised 2004), and Form and Method: Composing Music (2002) – has appeared widely in international journals such as Perspectives of New Music, The Musical Quarterly, Polyphone (Japan), MusikTexte (Germany), the Contemporary Music Review (London), Nature, and Music Perception.

Current projects include two Books of Etudes for piano (commissioned by the Fromm Foundation), SEASONS (in collaboration with Alarm Will Sound, Alan Pierson, and Susan Narucki), and george WASHINGTON, a multimedia work for 3 narrators and the National Symphony Orchestra in collaboration with Ross Karre, Jaime Oliver, and Josef Kucera. The Los Angeles Times’ Mark Swed has labeled Reynolds an “all-around sonic visionary.” For further information visit www.rogerreynolds.com or the Library of Congress.

PAUL HEMBREE

Paul Hembree currently pursues a Ph.D. with advisor Roger Reynolds, for whom he works as a computer music performer and research assistant. He recently performed Reynolds’ Toward Another World with Alarm Will Sound clarinetist Bill Kalinkos, and premiered Positings with Southwest Chamber Music on the LA International New Music Festival. He has also performed the intermedia lecture Passage 8 at Harvard University with Reynolds. As a composer, Hembree’s acoustic and computer music compositions synthesize the expressive power of polyphonic music in the Western classical tradition with experimental and electro-acoustic techniques to create a visceral and communicative sound. Recent projects include two chamber orchestra works, Light: Frozen and Refracted (2012), performed by Ensemble Intercontemporain at ManiFeste 2012, hosted by the Acanthes Academy and IRCAM, and Nimbus (2011), performed by UCSD’s Palimpsest ensemble. His electronic compositions include a long running series of works exploring cellular automata and multi-dimensional models of equal-tempered pitch space, most recently culminating in an improvisation environment called Chemical Oscillator (2011). Hembree holds a M.Mus. in composition from the University of Colorado and a B.Mus. in composition, magna cum laude, from the University of Oregon.
